

51. International ŠKODA TOUR 12.07.2014 – 19.07.2014

PROGRAM

ŠKODA

Welcome

to the 51st International ŠKODA TOUR 2014

Hollabrunn - Austria

The Škoda Tour organizational team
Angelika, Gerlinde, Hannes and Wolfgang

wish you lots of fun and a nice week.

The Town Hollabrunn is the district capital of the district of Hollabrunn in western wine district in Lower Austria with 11.563 residents (as of 1 January, 2014). The name of the city ("Holerbrunen") is derived from Holler (Elderberry) and wells.

History of Hollabrunn

Finally, a few words on the history of Hollabrunn: The area around the modern town has been populated since Neolithic days. In 1135, a settlement and land in this area was first mentioned in a written document. Since 1288, the name "Oberhollabrunn" ("Upper Hollabrunn") is recorded. In 1220, this place became a parish and later, received market privileges at some point before 1377.

In 1530, Hollabrunn became a post carriage stop on the line between Vienna and Prague, a coat of arms was granted to the prospering town in 1565. In these years, most of Lower Austria turned protestant. This changed for Hollabrunn after 1662, when the Princes of Dietrichstein became landlords and supported the counter-reformation. In 1667, a Capuchin monastery was founded, but dissolved again in 1782 upon orders of Emperor Joseph II.

The Napoleonic Wars led to a battle near Hollabrunn in 1805; this is why the town's name is mentioned in the Arc de Triomphe in Paris. The first half of the 19th century saw a rapid recovery of Hollabrunn, accelerated greatly by the establishment of county administration facilities in 1848. In 1872, Hollabrunn's station was built to link it to the "Süd-Norddeutsche Verbindungsbahn" (South-North German Link Train).

Since then, Hollabrunn prospered even more; in 1875, a hospital was built. In 1908, the town was elevated to the rank of a city; in 1928, the name Oberhollabrunn was finally changed into the current Hollabrunn. Today, Hollabrunn is a wealthy and neat market town with good links to Vienna; this might make it a convenient stop-over destination. Keep in mind, though, that Hollabrunn is by no means a very touristy place and that there are towns in Austria which definitely appeal more to international visitors than this one.

Lower Austria

(German:Niederösterreich) is the northeasternmost state of the nine states in Austria. The capital of Lower Austria since 1986 is Sankt Pölten, the most recently designated capital town in Austria. The capital of Lower Austria had formerly been Vienna, even though Vienna is not officially part of Lower Austria. With a land area of 19,186 km² and a population of 1.612 million people, it is the largest state in Austria, and in terms of population second only to the federal state of Vienna.

Geography

Situated east of Upper Austria, Lower Austria derives its name from its downriver location on the Danube River, which flows from west to east. Lower Austria has an international border, 414 km long, with the Czech Republic (mainly South Moravia) and Slovakia. The state has the second longest external border of all Austrian states. It borders on other Austrian states of Upper Austria, Styria and Burgenland. The state surrounds Vienna.

Lower Austria is divided into four regions, known as Viertel (quarters):

- Weinviertel or Tertiary Lowland (below the Manhartsberg),
- Waldviertel or Bohemian Plateau (above the Manhartsberg),
- Mostviertel (above the Vienna Woods)

- Industrieviertel (below the Vienna Woods).

These regions have different geographical structures. Whilst the Mostviertel is dominated by the foothills of the Limestone Alps with mountains up to 2,000 m AA high, most of the Waldviertel is a granite plateau. The hilly Weinviertel lies to the northeast, descends to the plains of Marchfeld in the east of the state, and is separated by the Danube from the Vienna Basin to the south, which in turn is separated from the Vienna Woods by a line of thermal springs (the Thermenlinie) running north to south.

The Weinviertel

(wine district) borders the Waldviertel to the east and as indicated by the name, the area is dominated by agriculture, in particular wine growing. This part of Lower Austria which is actually the largest wine growing area in the entire country is a worthwhile destination for culinary discoveries and offers visitors some charming sceneries.

a typical vine-yard

- The major wine types in the area are the Grüner Veltliner, Pinot Blanc, Welschriesling, Zweigelt and Blauer Portugieser.

Even though the Weinviertel is less well known than the Wachau or the Wienerwald region, and although the region's peaceful beauty is not always apparent at first glance, it is nevertheless well worth a visit, because with a little time, you can explore the many charms of this area away from the typical tourist trail.

One particular jewel in the Weinviertel's crown is the town of RETZ: Retz can boast many picturesque aspects of the Weinviertel in a concentrated form - for example, this 700 year old town has one of the most beautiful market squares in Austria. Korneuburg, Eggenburg, Hollabrunn and Mistelbach are also very interesting destinations, with the latter forming the economic and cultural heart of the Weinviertel.
